Suddenly, they shrink into a pot, and then surge forth." The surging Yellow River reaches this point, where its width of over 500 meters is abruptly constrained by the surrounding banks. The river narrows from top to bottom and tumbles and rushes over a 50-meter drop, creating a spectacle akin to water pouring out from a vast and incomparable pot. The mouth of the river narrows like the neck of a pot, hence the name "Hukou Waterfall." Described in the ancient Chinese book "Shangshu Yugong," it says, "The whirlpool of the river is like a pot." Two famous phenomena, "sailing on dry land" and "smoke rising from the water," are also rare sights here.
